Chapter 3: The Divine Triad

With the passing of the crowns, the multiverse was forever changed. The three monarchs who bore the full power of the Absolute Being had now ascended to their roles as the new embodiments of the Absolute. They were no longer merely rulers of their respective realms—Sung Jinwoo, Sung Su-Ho, and Ashborn had become something more. They had transcended their mortal origins, becoming the new Divine Triad—a force of unimaginable power and unity.

Each of them was now the embodiment of a unique aspect of the Absolute Being, each carrying with them the full weight of the seven fragments that had shaped the very foundation of the multiverse.

Absolute Humanoid Being: Sung Jinwoo, The Shadow Monarch

Sung Jinwoo, the Shadow Monarch, stood as the first and most powerful of the Three Absolute Beings. As the Absolute Humanoid Being, he embodied the will of creation, destruction, and balance, all woven together in his being. His body now glowed with an ethereal radiance, his eyes reflecting the vastness of the multiverse. The crown, forged from all seven fragments, settled upon his brow like an eternal crown of light and shadow.

His power was limitless, but it was not one he wielded lightly. Jinwoo knew the burden of responsibility that came with his role as the guardian of the multiverse. His every step resonated with the weight of a thousand realms, and yet, he stood unwavering. The shadows that once marked him as a mere Monarch had now become part of him, merging with the very light that his crown exuded. In his hands, both the darkness and the light danced in harmony, a testament to his understanding of the delicate balance that held the multiverse together.

He was the protector, the judge, and the guardian. As the Absolute Humanoid Being, Jinwoo’s will was the force that ensured no realm would fall under the weight of chaos or destruction. He could see and command all shadows, all souls, and all destinies. His purpose was clear: to protect and uphold the balance that defined all existence.

Absolute Dragonic Being: Sung Su-Ho, The Dragon Monarch

Sung Su-Ho, now the Absolute Dragonic Being, was the second of the Triad. His transformation from the mighty Dragon Monarch to this new form was both awe-inspiring and terrifying. With the power of the Dragon Emperor’s heart now merged with the force of the Absolute Being, Su-Ho was a living embodiment of Creation, Destruction, Balance, and Souls.

His appearance shifted as well, his form becoming more imposing, yet regal. His once human appearance now bore the mark of a dragon, his skin shimmering with the ethereal glow of dragon scales. His eyes burned with the intensity of an ancient fire, and when he spoke, his voice carried the rumble of a thousand storms.

But despite his fearsome new form, Su-Ho was not a creature of destruction alone. As the Absolute Dragonic Being, he was the perfect embodiment of the power to create and annihilate in equal measure. His connection to the dragon realm had only deepened, and he could now command the very elements of creation. From the swirling winds to the searing flames, Su-Ho's power was a force of nature, one that he could wield to protect or destroy. He was a ruler of not just the dragons, but of the primal forces that governed the realms themselves.

Su-Ho was the guardian of all that was wild and untamed, the protector of the forces that created and annihilated. But with this power came a sense of duty—to ensure that no force, whether of creation or destruction, would ever again tip the balance of the multiverse.

Absolute Celestial Being: Ashborn, The Celestial Guardian

The third member of the Triad, Ashborn, now stood as the Absolute Celestial Being. His appearance had undergone a profound transformation, reflecting his new role as a celestial force. Once a being of shadow, Ashborn now embodied the light, the purity, and the divine authority of the heavens.

Ashborn's form took on the appearance of a humanoid angelic celestial, his presence exuding an aura of serenity and power. His six wings, pure and radiant, spread wide, each feather shimmering with divine light. His skin had become a pale white, as if carved from the very essence of the heavens themselves. Resting upon his head was a golden helmet, gleaming with an almost blinding light, while his silver armor glinted with celestial brilliance, reflecting the stars of a thousand realms.

Draped in white robes that billowed like the clouds of the heavens, Ashborn was the embodiment of purity, wisdom, and judgment. His every movement was graceful yet commanding, as if the very forces of the universe bent to his will. In his hand, he held a one-edged sword, its blade forged from the very light of creation. This weapon was not just a symbol of power—it was a tool for guiding and maintaining the balance of the multiverse. With it, Ashborn could cut through the darkness of chaos and defend the light of order.

He was no longer merely a guardian of the shadows, as he had once been. Now, as the Absolute Celestial Being, Ashborn had become a figure of both wisdom and might. His role was to oversee the higher planes of existence, to protect the celestial order, and to ensure that the forces of light never faltered.

When Ashborn needed to travel across the realms, he was not bound by the limitations of time and space. Instead, he rode his celestial horse, a magnificent steed with a coat of radiant white that shimmered with the stars. The horse could traverse the heavens and realms at will, carrying Ashborn wherever his divine mission called him.

The Triad's Unity

Together, the three now stood united, the full power of the Absolute Being flowing through their veins. The realms trembled at the presence of the Divine Triad—three beings whose power was as boundless as it was pure. They were no longer just monarchs of their domains; they were the guardians of the multiverse. The force that had once threatened to rip the very fabric of existence apart now stood as the ultimate source of balance, order, and protection.

The Divine Triad was not just a force of power—it was a beacon of hope for the multiverse, a symbol of unity between creation, destruction, light, and dark. But even as they stood united, the Triad knew that their task was far from over. Forces of chaos still lurked in the corners of the multiverse, and other threats, perhaps even more dangerous, would eventually arise. But for now, they stood as the protectors, the watchful eyes who would safeguard the realms from any who would dare disrupt the delicate balance they had sworn to uphold.
